Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Structure of the Horse s Foot: And the Principles of Shoeing Originally the art of shoeing must have been based on observation of the effects of wear on the natural protective covering of the foot, the hoof-horn. Even in the wild state it is more than probable that the hoofs suffered injury from attrition and concussion, but in such cases the horse would instinctively avoid using the damaged foot unnecessarily until the damage had been repaired by fresh growth of horn. In domestication some plan of avoiding the loss of the animals services while a new horny covering was developed would soon become a necessity, and it is easy to understand that the device of attaching a ring or plate of some wear-resisting material to the bottom of the horses foot would be resorted to. After many experiments it would have been discovered that less than iron-resistant materials were not well adapted for the purpose of protecting the hoof from undue wear. Whatever might have been the nature of the substance first employed, it may...
