Dept. of Agriculture, Forest Service, Rocky Mountain Research Station, 2008 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)313457559 Subject: Forest policy -- United States. Excerpt: . . . Applying Wilderness Character to the NEPA Process This section provides suggestions for how to incorporate wilderness character concepts into the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) process. While generally following what is known as the NEPA Triangle (fig. 1), this section is not a primer on NEPA and assumes a functional understanding of the NEPA process. Although wilderness character concepts can be applied to many aspects of the NEPA process, its greatest application may be in analyzing effects at the project level and describing desired conditions for programmatic direction in Forest or Wilderness Plans. This section demonstrates how the four qualities of wilderness character could be incorporated into NEPA at both programmatic and project levels. Ten hypothetical examples, in boxes, show how these qualities may be incorporated into each step of NEPA. Management decisions require articulating the tradeoffs and expected results for projects that affect the preservation of wilderness character. For example, the decision not to build a footbridge across a stream may preserve certain qualities of wilderness character, while building the footbridge may diminish certain qualities of wilderness character. These distinctions are important to describe in the environmental compliance process, and the wilderness character concepts discussed here provide methodology and language to articulate how wilderness character is affected.
