On the paternal side his ancestry runs back to Edward Garfield, who in 1635 was recorded as one of the proprietors of what is now the town of Watertown, Mass. His mother was a descendant of one of those Huguenots whom the famous Edict of Nantes drove from their beloved France to seek religious freedom in the New World. From the Garfields he inherited physical and moral strength; while from his mother he received that intellectual vigor and those fine mental qualities which have marked in many generations the descendants of Maturin Ballou. President Garfield's birthplace was a log-cabin, in a wilderness some fifteen miles from that modest home which he left in order to take up his residence at the white House. He was the youngest of four children, who were left fatherless eighteen months after his birth. The widowed mother held her homestead farm, and her children together upon it. Thomas, the oldest, and the only other boy, was a manly little fellow, and did what he could to help, while the sisters also made themselves useful in the household.
