Howard has offered to pay my cricketing subscription, as I would not ask my father for it just now, but I declined, for I will not get into debt. The girls, I know, are hard up, and so I shall not trouble any one. My chum s offer is very kind, but though I must confess to having shed some tears--not crocodile s either--over the disappointment, I shall be firm and stick to my principles. Everything is very prosy and dull just now, and I long to break bounds, and go in for a row, by way of a change. That won t do, however, so I must grin and bear my lot. I was reading some lines to-day that cheered...
